

Role play

The Deadline Dilemma between a teacher and a student.

Will the student be able to convince the teacher?... or fail?

Let's see together...

1

Role : Teacher

Today is the deadline for project submissions. All the students submitted their projects except for one irresponsible student. This student comes to you, listing excuses and explaining the reasons for not completing the project on time. He/She is asking for extra time to finish it. You know that this student often does this, but this time, he/she looks genuinely upset.

Would you give extra time?

Role : Teacher

Today is the deadline for project submissions. All of the students have submitted their projects except one. This student comes to you, listing excuses and explaining the reasons for not completing the project on time. He/She is asking for extra time to finish the project. You know that under normal circumstances, he/she is a hardworking and responsible student.

Would you grant the extra time?

Role : Student

Today is the deadline for project submissions. All the students submitted their projects except you. You need extra time to do the project work but you haven't started yet. If you cannot convince the teacher for it, you will fail the class. You need a high point from this project as your exam results are below 40. You have a bad reputation for being lazy and you had already listed many excuses before for not doing weekly assignments.

You have no choice but to convince the teacher.

Role : Student

Today is the deadline for project submissions. All the students submitted their projects except you. You are a hardworking and responsible student who always completes assignments on time. This is the first time you have failed to meet a deadline. You worked hard to submit your project but something unexpected happened and you couldn't make it. You need one more week to finish the project properly because it is important for your final grade.

Explain yourself to the teacher.
